WHOLESALE MARKET PRICES AT SAN FRANCISCO

1944

The material used in this summary was taken each Wednesday from the daily reports issued by the San Francisco office of the Federal-State Market News Service and represents sales on the wholesale produce market in less than carload lots. In a few cases, where items were not offered or quoted on Wednesdays, quotations on the nearest day of the same week were used.

In all cases an effort was made to select districts, varieties, and/or containers most regularly available on the market in order to provide a series with the fewest possible breaks. Where a definite grade has not been specified, quotations have been selected as consistently as possible on stock of generally good quality and condition. Extreme high prices on fine quality stock and low prices on stock of inferior quality and condition were disregarded.

These price data, when studied in conjunction with the annual unload reports, should present a fair picture of the price and supply conditions prevailing on the San Francisco market during the year. The wide variation in quality, containers, varieties, producing districts, and the very nature of the marketing of perishable produce make it difficult to reduce these price data to a single or average price suitable for statistical use.

Wholesale prices during 1944 varied considerably from those of the previous year. Higher prices for some items were more or less offset by lower prices for others. Some were higher part of the year and lower at other times. Some commodities, especially fruits and potatoes, brought ceiling prices all or most of the year. Some vegetables were at the ceiling at the beginning and end of the year, but were slightly to considerably below at other times. Melons were below the ceiling almost the entire season. Grapefruit, raspberries, pineapples, radishes, and garlic brought higher prices throughout 1944, while oranges were higher except during the last six weeks, and potatoes except during March and June. Mushrooms were higher most of the year. Asparagus averaged about the same as in 1943. Grapes were about the same except during the last two months, when price ceilings were not in effect. Broccoli was lower during March, April and May, but about the same the rest of the year. Bananas and strawberries were lower throughout the year as a result of lower price ceilings. Cantaloups and nectarines were lower all during the season and watermelons and peas most of the season. Apples, brussels sprouts, dry and green onions, sweet potatoes, peaches, pears, and rhubarb were higher during the first of the year but lower during the latter part, while the opposite was true of lemons, lettuce, peppers, and eggplant. Artichokes and beets were slightly higher early in the year, slightly lower during the summer months, and about the same the last part of the year. Carrots, cauliflower and corn were about the same as in 1943 to slightly lower, while tomatoes and squash were about the same to higher. Beans and celery were higher during the summer months and from slightly higher to slightly lower at other times of the year. Avocados were higher except during the summer months.

WHOLESALE MARKET PRICES AT SAN FRANCISCO - 1945

The material used in this summary was taken each Wednesday from the daily reports issued by the San Francisco Office of the Federal-State Market News Service and represents sales on the wholesale produce market in less than carload lots. In a few cases, where items were not offered or quoted on Wednesday, quotations on the nearest day of the same week were used. In all cases an effort was made to select districts, varieties, and/or containers most regularly available on the market in order to provide a series with the fewest possible breaks. Where a definite grade has not been specified, quotations have been selected as consistently as possible on stock of generally good quality and condition. Extreme high prices on fine quality stock and low prices on stock of inferior quality and condition were disregarded.

These price data, when studied in conjunction with the annual unload reports, should present a fair picture of the price and supply conditions prevailing on the San Francisco market during the year. The wide variation in quality, containers, varieties, producing districts, and the very nature of the marketing of perishable produce make it difficult to reduce these price data to a single or average price suitable for statistical use.

Wholesale prices averaged higher in 1945 than in 1944. Several commodities were consistently higher all or practically all of the year, but this was offset to some extent by others which were lower part of the year. Green asparagus, corn, bunched beets and turnips, and tangerines were higher all through the year, while bananas, broccoli, brussels sprouts, cauliflower, garlic, peaches, and banana and hubbard squash were higher almost all of the year. Loose bunched carrots were higher practically all of the year, but crated carrots ranged from slightly higher to slightly lower. Northwestern apples were slightly higher almost all year while California apples were slightly higher to slightly lower. Cabbage, grapefruit, potatoes, rutabagas, and spinach were higher most of the first eight or nine months and lower during the remaining months. Avocados were considerably higher except during the last two months. Celery, lettuce, peas, peppers and radishes at times were slightly to considerably higher and at other times were slightly to considerably lower, but during most of the year were higher than in 1944. Artichokes were slightly to much higher most of the year. Snap beans, dry onions, and sweet potatoes were slightly lower during the early part of the year and slightly higher toward the close. Pears were much lower the first half of the year and slightly higher the last couple of months. Cantaloups and watermelons were slightly higher except during the early part of the season. Oranges and lemons were about the same to slightly lower except during the last two months, when they were much higher. Tomatoes, green onions, and Italian and Summer squash varied from higher to lower. Rhubarb was about unchanged most of the year, although slightly lower at times. Cucumbers were considerably lower during midseason, but slightly higher later. Eggplant was lower most of the year and grapes were lower throughout the season. Strawberries and blackberries were mostly about the same as in 1944, while raspberries were lower early in the season and slightly higher during the last four months. Loganberries, youngberries, and boysenberries were higher practically all season.

The material used in this summary was taken each Wednesday from the daily reports issued by the San Francisco office of the Federal-State Market News Service and represents sales on the wholesale produce market in less than carload lots. In a few cases, where items were not offered or quoted on Wednesday, quotations on the nearest day of the same week were used. In all cases an effort was made to select districts, varieties, and/or containers most regularly available on the market in order to provide a series with the fewest possible breaks. Where a definite grade has not been specified, quotations have been selected as consistently as possible on stock of generally good quality and condition. Extreme high prices on fine quality stock and low prices on inferior quality and condition were disregarded.

These price data, when studied in conjunction with the annual unload reports, should present a fair picture of the price and supply conditions prevailing on the San Francisco market during the year. The wide variation in quality, containers, varieties, producing districts, and the very nature of the marketing of perishable produce make it difficult to reduce these price data to a single or average price suitable for statistical use.

Wholesale prices of fruits and vegetables on the San Francisco market averaged a little lower in 1947 than in 1946, although there were several items which were higher most or all of the year and others which were higher during part of the year.

Bananas and celery were slightly higher practically the entire year and cabbage, lettuce, peppers, sweet potatoes, tomatoes, and turnips were slightly higher most of the year. On the other hand, brussels sprouts, all types of berries, grapes, mushrooms, pears, and pineapples were slightly to considerably lower all or nearly all of the year. California Newtown apples and garlic were considerably lower almost throughout the year, and lemons were slightly lower most of the time.

Northwestern apples, avocados, oranges, rutabagas, and the soft types of squash were slightly higher most of the first six months of the year and slightly lower during most of the last six months, while the reverse was true of artichokes, broccoli, carrots, dry onions, and Hubbard and Banana squash, with carrots and onions being considerably higher in the late months. Beans, beets, cantaloups, cauliflower, corn, cucumbers, eggplant, grapefruit, green onions, peas, peaches, and spinach were slightly to considerably higher at times and slightly to considerably lower at other times. Nectarines ranged from about unchanged to a little higher, and asparagus, cranberries, radishes, and rhubarb were unchanged to slightly lower.

The material used in this summary was taken each Wednesday from the daily reports issued by the San Francisco office of the Federal-State Market News Service and represents sales on the wholesale produce market in less than carload lots. In a few cases, where items were not offered or quoted on Wednesday, quotations on the nearest day of the same week were used. In all cases an effort was made to select districts, varieties, and/or containers most regularly available on the market in order to provide a series with the fewest possible breaks. Where a definite grade has not been specified, quotations have been selected as consistently as possible on stock of generally good quality and condition. Extreme high prices on fine quality stock and low prices on inferior quality and condition were disregarded.

These price data, when studied in conjunction with the annual unload reports, should present a fair picture of the price and supply conditions prevailing on the San Francisco market during the year. The wide variation in quality, containers, varieties, producing districts, and the very nature of the marketing of perishable produce make it difficult to reduce these price data to a single or average price suitable for statistical use.

Wholesale prices of the various fruits and vegetables on the San Francisco market in 1948 varied considerably from those of 1947. The average of all commodities combined possibly was slightly higher than in 1947.

Items which were slightly to considerably higher most of the year were bunched beets, brussels sprouts, cherries, garlic, grapefruit, lemons, oranges, Bartlett pears, rhubarb, the soft types of squash, sweet potatoes, and watermelons. Avocados, snap beans, corn, and eggplant ranged from higher to lower, but most of the time were higher than in 1947, while bananas were about unchanged the first six months of the year and were slightly higher during the last six months. Carrots, onions, peas, and potatoes were from slightly to considerably higher the first six months of the year and from slightly to considerably lower the last six.

Cabbage, celery, cranberries, and pears other than Bartletts were from slightly to considerably lower most of the year. Artichokes, strawberries, cauliflower, bunched green onions, and rutabagas ranged from higher to lower, but mostly were lower than in 1947, while lettuce, radishes, raspberries, youngberries, and boysenberries were mostly from about the same as in 1947 to slightly lower. Apples and mushrooms were lower most of the first six months and higher the last six months. Commodities which showed little variation from 1947 or where the variations were about evenly balanced were asparagus, lima beans, blackberries, loganberries, cantaloups, cucumbers, grapes, peppers, the hard types of squash, tomatoes, and turnips.
